

MORNING APPEAL.

Tuesday, October 5 1886

THE ACQUITTAL OF CROW.

Sunday morning the jury in the Crow case, after being out since the evening previous, brought in a verdict of "Not guilty."

The verdict was what the public had generally expected. It was an unusual case, and much interest was manifested in it. The testimony of the case simply bore out conclusions which most people of this vicinity had reached long ago. While the killing was deliberate it was clearly brought about by Hogan's own brutal acts, and while the deceased had many good qualities, he had rendered himself such a terror to his neighbors that his untimely taking off did not occasion much regret.

There is, at the present time, no necessity for any citizen of Nevada to go constantly armed. Curley Hogan had been for years known as a man who always went armed, and by natural disposition was brutal, passionate and revengeful. That he once attempted the life of the defendant, a mere boy, there can be no doubt; that he often expressed the wish that he had killed him there can be no doubt; that he ever and ever again publicly announced his intention of killing him there can be no doubt.

After Hogan had received the fatal shot he was picked up, and a loaded six-shooter found protruding half way out of his front pants pocket.

Men who carry revolvers generally carry them in the hip pocket. When shifted to the front pocket it is done for a purpose—that the man who is to be shot may not realize from the motion of his opponent's hand that a weapon is about to be drawn. When a man reaches to his hip pocket for a weapon it is the signal that trouble is about to begin. When he places his hand in his front pants pocket he is not supposed to be about drawing a weapon, and can have his hand on the handle of a pistol all the while, unsuspected by the other. It requires two motions to draw from behind and but one to draw from the front. When Hogan secreted the pistol in his front pocket he meant to use it quickly. It is claimed that the invention of fire arms placed the weak on equal terms with the strong. It certainly did in this instance. The weak boy, whose life had for so long been made a terror by a man who was a giant physically, finally blew his tormentor's brains out with a pistol. Hogan's blood was on his own head. He forced the quarrel on the boy, followed him, threatened his life over and over again, and was finally killed himself.

From all the circumstances surrounding the case it is clear to this community that the boy had either to flee the country to save his life, or kill Hogan. It was a deplorable and bloody piece of work, but it carries its lesson with it, and teaches that broilers and fighters who make threats and carry fire arms to terrorize their neighbors, are just as liable to die suddenly as anyone else.

NON-PARTISAN POLITICS.

The politics that skulk under a non-partisan mask are the most dispicable sort, and the kind that ought to be watched the most. The non-partisan Anti-Chinese League threw off its mask last Saturday night in an open proposition to run a political ticket. We all know the crowd and its objects. It is the old Mugwump gang of disappointed camp followers of the Republican party, warmed over again.

Ever since the memory of man these same unfortunate people have rowed and wrangled and endeavored to raise political disturbances in Ormsby, that they might, if possible, deprive it of the name of being the banner county of the State. They belong to a class of man haters. They hate every man who succeeds; they hate God, that he was so thoughtless of them when he distributed his gifts of intelligence and common sense; they hate every man who gets public office without consulting them; they hate each other cordially, and each one of the resolute, disappointed kicking gang goes off every afternoon and hates himself. They dip and flap from one political camping, ground to another growling and scouring all the time like a baboon in a thicket, who gnashes his teeth with rage every time he considers how near he came to being a man, and failed.

Every year the vote of this harmless little clique grows smaller and smaller until in a few years it will go down casting but a single vote and the tombstone erected over the ashes of the departed party will be inscribed:

"Sacred to the memory of the editor of the Union."

Billy Corbett will kneel by the grave every year and read the prayers.
